CC&Rs; — excerpt

Article I — Boundaries and use of lots

Each lot is bounded by the recorded map and may be used only for single-family residential purposes with the accessory uses customary to such homes. No lot may be used for a trade or business that generates traffic or nuisance for neighbors, and no exterior storage of inoperable vehicles is permitted.

Article II — Assessments

The association may levy regular assessments for common expenses and special assessments for capital work, in each case after the notice the bylaws require. Assessments become a lien on the lot as provided by statute when recorded. An owner remains responsible for assessments until the association records a release or the transfer completes per the governing documents.

Article III — Architectural control

No structure may be erected, altered, or externally painted without approval of the architectural committee. Applications are decided within the timeframe in the bylaws; approval may be withheld for incompatible design. Emergency repairs to prevent damage may proceed with notice to the committee.

Article IV — Maintenance and damage

Each owner maintains the lot and improvements in a neat condition, keeps landscaping from obstructing walkways, and promptly repairs damage the owner causes. The association may perform maintenance an owner neglects after notice and charge the cost to the owner's account.

Article V — Insurance and casualties

Each owner maintains the lot and improvements in a neat condition, keeps landscaping from obstructing walkways, and promptly repairs damage the owner causes. The association may perform maintenance an owner neglects after notice and charge the cost to the owner's account.

Article V — Insurance and casualties

The association carries property coverage for common areas and, where the governing documents provide, for structures on lots. Owners should carry their own hazard and liability coverage; losses affecting an individual lot are allocated under the master policy and the association's deductible rules.

Article VI — Rules and enforcement

The board may adopt rules consistent with the CC&Rs; covering recreation, parking, pets, and quiet hours. Violations may be cured by notice and, if uncured, may lead to fines or lien enforcement as the governing documents and law allow.

Article VII — Meetings and voting

Annual and special member meetings are held after written notice mailed or electronically delivered to owners of record. One vote attaches to each lot unless the bylaws provide otherwise. Proxies may be accepted for a single meeting and expire when the meeting adjourns.
